ABOUT THE DEPARTMENT

The Department of English, functions in synergy with Engineering Departments. Manned by nine committed and well experienced faculty members, the department gives strong impetus to research and classroom innovations.

The department has a well equipped language laboratory which provides rich resources to hone communication skills and soft skills.

ABOUT THE PROGRAMME

The criticality of reading and writing cannot be understated. Advanced reading and writing skills contribute to the effectiveness with which engineers assimilate and disseminate technical information. Hence, an engineering graduate should be equipped with excellent reading and writing skills. Reading is vital because an engineer has to read a variety of texts. Similarly the purpose of any professional writing is to communicate specific ideas through clarity, understanding and right usage of words. A person who possesses proficiency in reading automatically becomes a prolific writer. Moreover, reading and writing are important leadership skills for engineers as they are often expected to report on their work and also to add to the corporate memory.
